South Melbourne Park opens its doors!

Our community now has a second new local school in as many years with the opening of South Melbourne Park Primary School.

Following the opening of South Melbourne Primary School last year, the new school, located in Albert Park Reserve, was formally unveiled at an assembly on February 4.

Minister for Education James Merlino said: “South Melbourne Park Primary will be more than just a great new local school, it will be a hub for the whole community.”

Tea House preserved ... for now

By Sean Car

An application for a 24-storey development at the site adjoining Southbank’s iconic heritage Robur Tea Building has been refused a permit by Heritage Victoria.

Developer RJ International (Aus) Pty Ltd’s application for a hotel at 28 Clarendon St was originally submitted as a 39-storey proposal back in 2017.

However, its latest proposal has been denied a permit by Heritage Victoria, which wrote to the developer on December 21 explaining its reasons for refusal:

“It has been determined that the construction of a 24-storey tower on the Robur Tea Building site would have a substantial detrimental impact on the cultural heritage significance of the place and on the setting and views of the Robur Tea Building.”

“Heritage Victoria’s refusal means the developer will now likely pursue an amended proposal for the site. Refusals issued by Heritage Victoria can only be appealed to the Heritage Council, not the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal (VCAT).

The City of Melbourne’s chair of heritage and assistant chair of planning Cr Rohan Leppert told Southbank Local News that the proposal in its current form would have overwhelmed the historic Tea House.

“Heritage Victoria’s decision acknowledges that the proposed new building would have overwhelmed the Tea House. But there’s still a live planning application, and the applicant is free to pursue modified proposals as well, which I don’t want to prejudge.”

“I think the site is able to be developed, but like Heritage Victoria, council will be considering whether the Tea House is being given enough room to ensure its integrity as a building of state significance stays intact.”

RJ International did not respond to Southbank Local News for comment.
Crown requests extension

Crown Resorts and Schiavello have formally requested an extension of time for their billion-dollar development One Queensbridge.

The permit issued for the site, under planning scheme amendment C310 as a project of “state significance”, expires on March 2.

Conditions on the amendment state that the joint venture partners had to have commenced construction on the project within two years of gazettal, which it has not.

Minister for Planning Richard Wynne confirmed that a request to extend the time of the planning scheme amendment had been received.

The developers were issued a permit in March 2017 under the planning exemption of “state significance”, due to the project’s $21 billion contribution to the state economy.

A $100 million “public benefits package”, including upgrades to Queensbridge Square, Sandridge Bridge and a viewing deck atop the 90-storey tower, was also promised.

Approved at 323 metres, One Queensbridge would become Australia’s tallest tower including 708 apartments and featuring a new 6-star, 388 room hotel.

The City of Melbourne’s assistant chair of planning Cr Rohan Leppert, who took to Twitter in December challenging the government to send the developers through a proper planning process, told Southbank Local News there was no “normal process”.

“While there is an MOU (Memorandum of Understanding) between the state and council on how ministerial planning applications are assessed, this doesn’t apply to planning scheme amendments, which is what Crown will need to get an extension of time on One Queensbridge,” he said.

“So, there is no ‘normal process’ per se. In 2016, the minister referred the original planning scheme amendment proposal to council seeking feedback, but then made the decision to approve the amendment in February 2017 just days before council was due to consider it. I very much hope that this is not what is meant by ‘normal process’.

“It would be better, in my opinion, if the minister encouraged Crown to make a fresh planning application so that it can be assessed in the usual way, which would bring about the accountability and scrutiny that has been missing to date.”

Crown Resorts was contacted for comment but did not respond to Southbank Local News.
Haig St a sign of office trend?

By Sean Car and David Schout

In what might prove a sign of things to come in the central city, developer Meydan Group has resubmitted a brand-new application for a 30-storey commercial office tower at 57-59 Haig St.

While the developer already has approval to construct a 39-storey residential tower at the site, it lodged a new application with the City of Melbourne for a development that would wholly comprise office space, as well as a ground floor café.

If approved, the 19,386-sqm development would include 40 car parks as well as a rooftop garden.

In its application, the developer said the new development would fulfill the vision set out in the State Government’s Plan Melbourne strategy 2017-2050 by providing for the continued growth of knowledge and a high-skilled workforce.

From a Haig St perspective, it said that the development would rejuvenate what is currently an “underutilised and inactive street during the business day” and enhance the passive surveillance of the street by improving the pedestrian experience.

Meydan Group did not respond to Southbank Local News requests to provide comment.

The application comes in the midst of Minister for Planning Richard Wynne’s announcement that he is considering easing separation and public provision conditions for approval in 2019, including sites at 55 LaTrobe St, 555 Collins St, 60 Collins St and 383 Bourke St – another site originally slated as a residential high-rise.

And a host of large-scale commercial office developments are expected to be submitted for approval in 2019, including sites at 55 King St, 555 Collins St, 60 Collins St and 383 LaTrobe St.

Having previously operated out of South Wharf, the hotel operator has been selected by the developer as its preferred option following a shortlisting process for its hotel at the corner of Power and Kavanagh streets.

General Manager of OSK Property Michael Longmire confirmed the developer was now working closely with the Hilton development team to finalise the necessary agreements for the international hotel to return to Melbourne.

“We look forward to revealing more on the final vision for this landmark hotel at the conclusion of this process,” Mr Longmire said.

“Asuming all goes as planned, the proposed hotel will be part of stage two in the development and will likely include 600 rooms, globally acclaimed food and beverage offerings and guest amenities rivalling the very best global hotel.”

Stage one of Melbourne Square features 1654 apartments across two towers and is currently 75 per cent sold, with construction due for completion in 2020.

The new hotel will be delivered as part of stage two of the development, which will also include a third residential tower.

Hilton to return

Hilton Hotels & Resorts looks set to return to postcode 3006, with Melbourne Square developer OSK Property currently in negotiations with the company to operate its new 600-room flagship hotel.

Want the good stuff?
Fate conspired to deliver an alleged drug dealer into the hands of police in Southbank in the early hours of January 23.

Officers were at the Southbank Police Station about 1.30am when a man attended to report that his car had been broken into in Power St. Members asked the man to return to his car so they could attend and examine the car. At the scene, the victim told police he believed that the offender had touched a nearby car and pointed out a vehicle. Officers accidentally went to the wrong car and noticed a man in the driver’s seat. He allegedly asked police if they were there to buy drugs and if they wanted “the good stuff”.

Strangely enough, this resulted in officers searching the vehicle and locating 1000 tablets of what is believed to be ecstasy as well as speed, ice and $5800.

The 26-year-old from Melton was later charged with trafficking and possessing ecstasy, trafficking and possessing methylamphetamine, possessing prescribed medication and deal property proceeds of crime.

He was remanded and will appear at the Melbourne Magistrates Court on February 16.

Doughnut heist
Police are appealing for witnesses after two men stole a box of doughnuts from a Southbank service station in January.

The incident occurred when the men entered the City Rd store at 11.30pm on January 13. The men walked around the store, with one man selecting and paying for a can of corn, while the second man stood next to him at the counter.

After the first man paid for the corn, the second man grabbed a box, containing 96 doughnuts, from the counter and ran from the store. Police believe the two men also stole a toothbrush and a chocolate bar in the incident.

One man is described as being aged in his late 30s to early 40s with short brown hair. The second man is aged in his 30s, approximately 180cm tall with a thin build.

Police have released CCTV security footage and images of two men who they believe may be able to assist with their enquiry.

Boyd Park
Construction works at Boyd Park recommenced in January following the completion of demolition works in December.

Demolition of the old classroom building behind Boyd Community Hub was completed before Christmas, while the park remained open over the holiday period.

The site of the old classroom building, which will make way for the new village green space, was successfully cleared and works continue to remove the building footings. Hoarding around this site will remain in place until park construction commences.

Work to relocate the gas main in Kavanagh St have been completed, with some street parking on Kavanagh St closed during this period.

Construction of the new park has now commenced and is expected to take approximately six months to complete. The new park will open in stages.

Southbank Boulevard
Works resumed on Southbank Boulevard on January 14 following a holiday closure period between December 21 and January 13.

Works undertaken during December and January included:

- Electrical work in Southbank Boulevard and Sturt St.
- Installation of traffic signals at the intersection of Sturt St and Southbank Boulevard.
- Asphalting of the intersection of Sturt St and Southbank Boulevard and parts of the roadway of Southbank Boulevard between St Kilda Rd and Sturt St.
- Continued kerb channel works in Dodds St and Southbank Boulevard.

Southbank Boulevard between St Kilda Rd and Sturt St will gradually reopen this month.

Dodds St, between Grant St and the rear of the Melbourne Theatre Company, will continue to function as a road, parking area and drop-off for the Arts Precinct. Four accessible car parks are available outside 24 Dodds St, which has walking access to Southbank Boulevard.

Southbank welcomes Snr Sgt O'Toole

By Sean Car

Southbank Police Station's new station commander Snr Sgt Alex O'Toole knows our local area as well as anyone.

A policewoman of 19 years, Snr Sgt O’Toole most recently served at neighbouring South Melbourne Police Station for over 10 years and knows just how diverse our local community is.

Having begun her career in Frankston before moving west to Footscray and specialising in criminal investigations, her mixture of experience and knowledge makes her an incredible mentor and leader for the team here in Southbank.

“It’s a very diverse area,” she said. “There’s a lot of businesses here, there’s industrial areas, there’s also residential areas and there is a difference between the socio-economic level of people.”

“There are those that have obviously got a lot of money and there are a lot of people that are in housing commission and we deal with all of those people on a daily basis so we have to have the knowledge to be able to deal with the demographics of our area.”

Snr Sgt O’Toole replaces former Southbank Police Station (formerly St Kilda Road Police Station) commander Steve Bills, who served in the role for the past seven years.

Given the large number of events in the area, Snr Sgt O’Toole said she looked forward to working with major stakeholders such as Crown Casino via the Southbank Safety and Security Committee to improve public safety.

One of the biggest headaches for local police continues to relate to thefts from apartment buildings and multi-level car parks. Whether due to leaving valuables on show inside their cars, leaving storage cages unsecured or not reporting tailgating, Snr Sgt O’Toole said there was many simple things locals could do to prevent such crimes.

Much like her predecessor, she told Southbank Local News she would be continuing to prioritise awareness around theft in the local area by encouraging vigilance among local residents and businesses.

With a passion for helping people and serving communities, she said she was excited to work with her new team and build new relationships within the Southbank community.

“To serve the community and you do take pride in that in the ability to help people in need is what I love about my job,” she said. “They always come to us with a problem and hopefully we can solve that or get a good result for them so they can get some closure.”

“They’ve (Southbank Police) been very welcoming and I look forward to having a great relationship with all of my work colleagues and also the community that I’m going to be working for.”

For any issues relating to local safety and security Snr Sgt O’Toole can be contacted via email on alexandra.OToole@police.vic.gov.au. She will also resume the bimonthly Safety and Security column in the March edition of Southbank Local News.
Culture, colour and family for CNY

By Jessica Carrascalao Heard

Family and culture will be the focus of celebrations at the 2019 Chinese New Year Melbourne Festival to bring in the Year of the Pig in February.

The festival, running from February 2 to 17, is set to see performances by local and international Chinese artists, and cooking demonstrations by 2017 MasterChef Australia winner Diana Chen.

Chinese New Year United chair Thomas Ling said this year’s festival would be “our biggest celebration yet”.

“We want to make every year bigger … we try to be more unique and more creative and bring up more, other aspects of the Chinese New Year heritage,” he said.

Lord Mayor Sally Capp, who will open the festival at Queensbridge Square in Southbank, said it was one of Melbourne’s favourite events.

“The Chinese New Year Festival Melbourne 2019 unites families and friends to celebrate Chinese culture and traditions across the city,” she said.

The festival is set to showcase traditional Chinese culture with its trademark colour and verve.

Light shows, dances, costume parades, and live music will all feature throughout the festival.

A lantern parade with the fire dragon and glowing lions will be on show at the closing ceremony.

With a bigger focus on culture this year, organisers have also reached out to community groups from other cultures to share in the celebrations.

“They may not come to present any performance, but they will come to experience what is happening during Chinese New Year in Melbourne,” Mr Ling said.

Mr Ling said it was important in Australia, especially in Victoria, as different ethnic groups form major communities here.

“Melbourne has long heralded itself as one of the most successful multicultural cities in the world,” he said.

The festival will also hold its first dragon boat regatta at Docklands, which organisers hope will become an international event by 2020.

Lion dances are scheduled for major events, including a lion dance on ice at the O’Brien Group Arena in Docklands.

Activities at the festival will be culture-focused, with the Cultural Kaleidoscope offering family-friendly workshops highlighting traditional Chinese culture as well as traditions from other Asian countries.

The Cultural Kaleidoscope is also home to the “Streets of Chinese Cuisine” marquee, where visitors can attend cooking demonstrations and try Chinese New Year treats.

Mr Ling said activities at the festival were designed to “keep every member of the family having fun, full of happiness and filled with delicious traditional festive food”.

Celebrations will span Southbank, Melbourne CBD, Docklands and up north at the Melbourne Museum.

The festival will officially close on February 17, with a ceremony at Melbourne Museum.

CNY United chair Thomas Ling and performance co-ordinator Junxi Su are joined by four children in traditional dress.

Reimagining our Arts Precinct from its centre

By Sean Car

The sense of excitement and spirit of collaboration that currently consumes Melbourne’s Arts Precinct is very real, according to one of its visionary leaders Claire Spencer. Southbank Local News caught up with Arts Centre Melbourne’s CEO last month to gain a deeper insight into why the State Government’s $208 million injection into the precinct has everyone on the edge of their seats.

“It’s the most exciting thing that has happened to the Arts Centre since it opened. I am absolutely sincere in saying that,” Ms Spencer said. “It will transform this part of the city and it will allow the urban genius that created this precinct to be finished.”

“To be part of something like that is an extraordinary privilege and with that comes great responsibility to make sure that every dollar that is being committed by the government is spent in a way that delivers on those outcomes. This is for all Victorians.”

Melbourne’s Arts Precinct is already a point of global envy. With one of the highest concentrations of arts, cultural and creative organisations anywhere in the world, it produces around 3000 performances and exhibitions every year.

With the creative industries contributing $23 billion to the Victorian economy annually, the value of having such a precinct in the heart of the city cannot be underestimated. The ideas, opportunities and social and cultural benefits it produces are endless.

However, as a precinct, it remains as Claire Spencer says, unfinished. Spanning from Hamer Hall right through to the Malthouse Theatre, connectivity between the more than 30 creative institutions that call Southbank home remains an issue. So too does much of the precinct’s aging infrastructure.

That’s why when the State Government announced in June last year that it was going six storeys underground so certainly the things that we’re thinking about are how do you make this building more open?

“One of the first challenges for us was ensuring that this stayed a really vibrant, successful, operating Arts Centre but that conversation quickly morphed into how do we reimagine this building for the next generation; recognising how much Melbourne has changed,” she said.

“A significant amount of the last couple of years has been spent on thinking well what is the opportunity here and then progressively working more closely with the NGV (National Gallery of Victoria) on this idea of a whole precinct reimaging.”

Now into her fifth year as CEO after 12 years working in a number of senior roles at the Sydney Opera House, Reimagining caps off what has been an incredibly successful four years for Arts Centre Melbourne under Claire Spencer’s leadership. Having assumed the role during what she described as a “challenging period” for the organisation in 2014, she said much of her early days had been focused on stabilising the business in order to provide the base on which to grow.

Describing herself as a “very purpose driven CEO”, she has done just that. From opening the hugely successful new Australian Music Vault gallery to bringing major summer musicals back, Arts Centre Melbourne is offering more shows and welcoming more people through its doors than ever before.

And while it might bear Melbourne in its title, Claire noted that the Arts Centre took its remit as being a home of arts for all Victorians very seriously. As a registered production-training organisation, it offers traineeships and support to venues and organisations across the state. This is on top of the 900 to 1100 staff it has on its books here in Southbank at any given time!

It has also recently launched a workplace health collective for the creative industries in partnership with WorkSafe, following a pilot program that saw 140 creative organisations around the state sign up in a year.

“It is for these reasons that Reimagining can’t come soon enough for the Arts Centre. Designed by architect Roy Grounds in the 1970s, Ms Spencer said the infrastructure was starting to “fight back” in the face of ongoing programmatic expansion.

“Roy Grounds was an amazing architect but this is a difficult building!” she said. “It’s hard to find the front door, once you’re inside where do you go? Which level am I on? We go six storeys underground so certainly the things that we’re thinking about are how do you make this building more open?

“I think in his designs that sense of connection and openness was something that was very interesting to him and so we’re very interested in exploring that further and thinking about what opportunities it can present for this building.”

The first phase of this billion-dollar Arts Precinct expansion will transform 1 City Rd, currently home to Southbank’s experimental public arts space Testing Grounds, into a new creative hub for the Arts Centre.

The hub will be home to the Australian Performing Arts Gallery, an expanded Australian Music Vault, administrative, education and research facilities, and a new centre for small-to-medium and independent arts organisations.

The project caters for 18,000sqm of new and renewed public space that will sit elevated above Sturt St comprising new outdoor spaces, garden, seating and cafes and bars.

Well highlighted has been the State Government’s purchase of the Carlton & United Breweries building on Southbank Boulevard, which will be home to NGV Contemporary (NGVC) – a world leading, stand-alone gallery with a focus on contemporary art and design.

From Creative Victoria to the City of Melbourne, through its upgrades to Southbank Boulevard and City Road, Ms Spencer believes that there has been a real “spirit of collaboration” among all stakeholders.

And the same spirit will be required with Melbourne’s philanthropic community as Arts Centre Melbourne and NGV embark on raising enough funds to match the state’s $208 million over the first two years.

“We’re incredibly lucky that in Melbourne philanthropy is part of the fabric of the city, and this building and others in the precinct, they were started and created by philanthropy as well as by government policy,” Ms Spencer said.

“We’re very blessed to have that commitment. I think Melbourne is distinct for that in Australia. People are invested in what these institutions bring to the city.”

With architects already appointed to deliver the vision for Theatres Building and works to get underway over the course of the coming years, Ms Spencer said the Arts Centre would remain open while it delivered this once-in-a-generation redevelopment.

“The team that is in place to deliver this is extraordinary and we have the full support of government through Creative Victoria and Development Victoria and a very healthy working relationship with our neighbours.

“All of the things that need to be in place for success is there. It’s amazing, I pinch myself really. It’s just such an extraordinary thing to be apart of.”

Security upgrades

By Jessica Carrascalao Heard

Construction of permanent security barriers on Princes Bridge has started, with steel bollards and reinforced blocks to be installed on both sides of the bridge.

Since construction started in mid-January, the footprint on the western side of the bridge has been closed, with pedestrians having to cross the road to get over the river. The bicycle lane on the western side is also closed during the day, forcing cyclists and motorists to share a single traffic lane between 9.30am and 4.30pm in February and March. The bicycle lane remains open during peak times and overnight.

The 88 block-shaped barriers will replace the temporary water-filled barriers which currently line St Kilda Rd across Princes Bridge.

Lord Mayor Sally Capp said: “As well as keeping people safe, a high priority for Princes Bridge is ensuring we maintain its significant heritage value.”

Unlike with the temporary concrete barriers in place at Queensbridge Square, graffiti and artwork will not be tolerated on the permanent barriers.

A City of Melbourne spokesperson said any changes to permanent security measures on Princes Bridge would need Heritage Victoria approval.

“City of Melbourne will remove graffiti, artwork, fabric covers or paint from permanent bollards or barriers,” the spokesperson said.

Once work has finished on the western side in March, work will start on the eastern side of the bridge.

Security upgrade construction also restarted at Flinders Street Station in January, with 20 steel bollards and an eight-metre barrier to be installed.

This is in addition to 33 steel bollards installed last year.

There are also plans to widen the pedestrian crossing over Flinders St on the western side of Swanston St and to also expand the forecourt at the station to 1300sqm.

Construction at Flinders Street Station will mainly happen overnight, from 8.00pm to 6.00am.

Local sports industry experience

The best learning occurs when a person gets to explore their aspirations.

It is with this aim that Holmesglen’s Sports Degrees have formed their foundation by engaging with a number of organisations based in Southbank.

“Specialised degree qualifications, focusing on the development of job and professional soft skills, are the way of the future,” Holmesglen Bachelor of Sports Media and Bachelor of Sport Business course leader Rubhri Coyle said.

Since the introduction of both courses, which form Holmesglen’s sports degrees’ offerings, students have benefited from this ambition. Each course treats learning with a bigger picture philosophy. "The goal is to create a clear pathway between a person’s education and his or her career.

"Industry engagement and applied learning opportunities, which are cornerstones of our sports degrees, assist our students in developing their confidence, attitude and attributes along with helping them to produce a folio," Mr Coyle said.

Bachelor of Sports Media student Ben Gibson used his qualification to complement his career outlook and build his work experience. He has gone on to receive the role of Melbourne Football Club’s digital content producer.

“I spent time with the Herald Sun, SEN, Crickmedia and Fox Footy [during my course], which was something I could never have imagined when I left Year 12 just three years ago,” Mr Gibson said. “These experiences are incredibly rare and I’m lucky the course was able to help me."

A core component of the sports degrees is the internship program; which students undertake in their third year. Holmesglen works closely with leading media and sports organisations including Fox Footy, Herald Sun, AFL Victoria, Cricket Victoria, Basketball Victoria, and Tennis Victoria.

Six of the best Southbankers

Southbank continues to demonstrate its credentials as a good home for honorary Australians, with six locals acknowledged in this year’s Australia Day Honours.

While our column inches could never do these decorated Australians justice, below are brief insights into some of the accomplishments of our six recipients. Southbank Local News congratulates and thanks each of them for their contributions.

Professor Olaf Heino Drummer – AO (Office of the Order of Australia).

For distinguished service to medicine in the field of forensic toxicology, to medical education and to professional groups.

Prof Drummer’s contribution to the field of forensic medicine and toxicology is extraordinary. As a leading professor at Monash University’s Department of Forensic Medicine (located at the Victorian Institute of Forensic Medicine in Southbank), he has published extensively in the fields of forensic pharmacology and analytical toxicology, including over 300 scientific papers and has written or co-written three books.

He completed his applied chemistry degree at the Royal Melbourne Institute of Technology in 1973 and obtained his PhD a few years later from Melbourne University. From 2001 to 2017, he served as the head of the university’s department of forensic medicine, school and public health and preventative medicine and has sat on a number of boards over what has been an extensive career.

Most notably, he served as the inaugural head of the Victorian Institute of Forensic Medicine from 1989 to 2014 and is a past president of the international association of forensic toxicologists.

In 2016, he received the International Association of Forensic Toxicology’s Allan Curry Award - the most prestigious in the field of forensic toxicology. His list of awards goes well beyond that award both here in Australia and internationally.

He has also acted as an expert forensic pharmacologist and toxicologist in hundreds of court cases in Australia and overseas, including some prominent murder trials.

Jonathon Eric Faine – AM (Member of the Order of Australia)

For significant service to the broadcast media as a radio presenter, to the law and to the community.

Jon Faine is one Melburnian who needs little introduction. As the host of ABC 774 Radio Melbourne’s morning show and conversation hour since 1997, his notable voice and incredible intellect have been gracing our airwaves for more than 20 years.

His former career as a lawyer has seemingly given him a particularly strong base through which to be able to interview the broad church of politicians, experts and other guests that he talks to daily from his studio here in Southbank.

Beginning his career at the Social Security Appeals Tribunal and as a principal lawyer for Fitzroy Legal Service in the 1980s, he also previously served as a volunteer and past member at the Tenants Union Legal Service and the Victoria Law Foundation.

He has also co-authored a number of books, edited the Law Handbook in 1987 and was a former host and producer of The Law Report on ABC Radio National.

“It’s a chance to say an incredibly inadequate thank you to those who make my professional life possible,” he said on 774 ABC Radio Melbourne upon receiving the award.

Rodney Smart

Karen Hayes – AM (Member of the Order of Australia)

For significant service to the community as an advocate for gender equity and to women in sport.

Karen’s contributions to our community here in Melbourne are far-reaching. Her work on the boards of the International Women’s Forum (IWF), Breast Cancer Network Australia (BCNA), Multiple Sclerosis Australia and Vision 2020 Australia, makes her one inspiring Aussie.

Her work in promoting gender equity is particularly inspiring. As well as her contributions to the IWF, she is also a member of the Women Chiefs of Enterprise International and is the former chair of Women of Melbourne, which she chaired during her time as a board director at the Melbourne Football Club.

She has also served as president of the VU Western Spur’s Women’s Football Club and has been a leading advocate for the introduction of the AFLW competition.

As if that isn’t enough, she has served as the CEO of Guide Dogs Victoria since 2011, where she has led the organisation through some of its biggest triumphs to date. One of those is the redevelopment of its iconic campus at Kew, which will soon transform into the world’s first sensory campus.

“It is a tremendous honour to be appointed as a Member (AM) of the Order of Australia and I am truly humbled to be named among the list of incredible Australians,” Karen told Guide Dogs Victoria upon receiving the award.

Christopher Antony Dale – OAM (Medal of the Order of Australia)

For service to the law.

A former president, director, vice-president, treasurer and chair and member of a range of committees at the Law Institute of Victoria, Chris Dale’s passion for the legal profession is self-evident.

With extensive experience in all areas of commercial litigation and alternative dispute resolution, insolvency and reconstruction and taxation litigation, Chris has practiced in all courts and tribunals in all Australian States and Territories, including the Federal and High Courts.

He also served as Victoria’s representative on the board of directors of the Law Council of Australia from 2004-2005 and is the current chair of the Bridge of Hope Foundation.

He is a former partner and board member at Clayton Utz law firm and currently practices as specialist counsel at O’Donnell Salzano lawyers.
Barbara Joan Rozennes – OAM (Medal of the Order of Australia)

For service to the community.

For the best part of the past 30 years, Barbara has devoted much of her time to the Court Network – a community organisation providing support, information and referral to people attending court. Current patrons of the organisation include the Governor of Victoria Her Excellency, the Honourable Linda Dessau AM, as well as the Chief Justice of the Victorian Supreme Court.

While she remains a leading ambassador of the organisation, she has also previously served as its president, vice-president and been a volunteer since 1992.

She has also served on the board of the Epilepsy Foundation since 1998, which is an organisation and a cause she is incredibly passionate about.

Beyond this, her work in the community has extended across a range of causes and organisations including the Royal Melbourne Hospital Neuroscience Foundation, Victorian Sentencing Advisory Council and One Umbrella (now Fairshare) just to name a few.

Mrs Jillian Joan Harrison – OAM (Medal of the Order of Australia)

For service to the community through charitable organisations.

Jill Harrison considers herself a quiet achiever behind the scenes and is not one wanting huge recognition or thanks. However, having spent much of her life helping others in need, an OAM only seems fitting.

While her philanthropy extends to a range of causes both here in Australia and overseas, her work for the Royal Children’s Hospital over the past 25 years through her secretarial services to Parkville Auxiliary and other positions has been tireless.

A Patron of Prince’s Trust Australia with association to UK and Australian young people’s charities, a supporter and donor of the National Gallery of Victoria as well as the Royal Botanic Gardens Victoria, Jill has served many other community charities and organisations and continues to do so.

Melbourne councillor Jackie Watts has been awarded an Australia Day honour for services to local government and to the community.

Cr Watts was awarded a Medal of the Order of Australia (OAM) in the general division. She told Southbank Local News she was humbled and honoured to receive the award.

“Knowing how much others do for the community, it is particularly humbling,” she said.

Cr Watts also said it was also pleasing to represent women in the award system, where gender equity was yet to be achieved.

She has been a councillor since 2011.

Cr Watts has a track record in community activism, advocating on behalf of residents and ratepayers through her work as Convener with the Carlton Residents Association, CoRBA-Melbourne (Coalition of Resident and Business Associations) and more recently, with the Carlton Alliance, a group dedicated to reunifying North Carlton with the City of Melbourne.

Men’s Shed looking for new members

Melbourne Men’s Shed in its sixth year is recruiting new members and is keen to attract more women.

The shed, located in the car park basement of Federation Square, has 70 members but less than 10 women.

Chairman Andrew Stefanetti told Southbank Local News the organisation’s facilities were open to the whole community.

He said “shedders” had been busy filling an order book for wooden toys. These ranged from cars, trucks and tops to old-fashioned horses on wheels attached to a push stick.

Eight shedders at Christmas donated a batch of more than 30 toys to the Royal Children’s Hospital. Those children who couldn’t go home picked their favourite.

Apart from toys, the shedders fill requests such as possum nesting boxes to lure possums out of home owners’ roof spaces. The Bureau of Meteorology wanted its delicate outdoor instruments repaired and computer classes.

Teaming up with the Rose Street Market on February 1, Testing Grounds hosted the first of two Showtime Night Markets in what was a colourful display of contemporary art and crafts.

For those who missed out on the first instalment, don’t fear! Showtime #2 will provide market lovers with a second chance to experience what is a different take on the night market idea.

In pushing the limits of what to expect, think 80s high school science fair meets classic country show, meets contemporary art fair, all packed into a craft market and turned up to maximum frequency.

Showtime #1 on February 1 featured market stalls by local artisans, music by Melbourne-based DJs, delicious food and drinks, as well as a huge array of fun activities facilitated by local contemporary artists, media art organisation Experimenta and independent gaming organisation Freeplay.

Market-goers were given the chance to experience a range of unique activities from playing the robot trumpet and casting objects using a homemade plastic vacuum former to learning songs on the drums and getting body-scanned and uploaded into a virtual world!

As well as squid ink cocktails, a foam machine, making runway ready gowns, becoming a choreographer and making your own computer games, this was no ordinary night market!

The events were conceived and curated by Testing Grounds curator Arie Rain Glorie, who is known for producing large-scale and experimental creative events in Melbourne.

So, what can locals expect from Showtime #2 on March 1? Here is a taste of what’s to come…

Pull the squeegee on a silk screen; become a film-maker; audio tune your senses; make a sculpture out of recycled clothing; learn how to play a trumpet made out of ice; test your perception through WWII flash training; make suspended mobiles out of everyday objects; join in on collective – durational walking; learn how to turn your old TV into an oscilloscope; catch your breath through high-speed flash photography; learn new pleasure techniques or even explore cyborgian Muslim identity.

Showtime #2 will take place on March 1 from 6pm to 10pm at Testing Grounds (1-23 City Road, Southbank). This is a free and all ages event. Wheelchair accessible.

Melbourne's literary judges continue to favour harrowing non-fiction, even when a festive and stylish setting has been chosen for the announcement of the 2019 Victorian Premier's Literary Awards.

The $100,000 prize was presented at a garden party in the MPavilion, complete with pink bubbles and celebrity host Candy Bowers.

Author of the prize-winning book No Friend but the Mountain spoke to the crowd by phone. “I am shoeless,” said Behrouz Boochani, who smuggled out his testimony by text from Manus Island where he is detained. “I want to show you where I am.”

His ironic commentary hit home among the well-heeled audience, which included at least three politicians, numerous literary judges, publishers, writers and readers, many in cocktail dresses for the illustrious occasion.

Last year The Trauma Cleaner by lawyer Sarah Krasnostein won the award, a biography of a transgender woman who suffered multiple traumas as a boy. “The awards have always been engaging,” says the publisher of the book, Michael Heywood from CBD-based Text Publishing. “They’ve been after a political edge.”

Text had three books on this year’s shortlist of 28, two very readable novels and one compelling memoir. How do authors feel about being treated as contestants in a competition?

“No-one becomes a writer because they want to become rich,” Heywood says. However, a prize is very important for writers and “lovely for publishers. Awards are now commercially influential.”

Martin Hughes, the publisher at Affirm Press, bought the rights for the winner of the unpublished manuscript in the 2018 awards - Decay Theory by Christian White. “It’s been our most successful book this year. We’ve sold the book into 18 countries, including China and it’s all through VPLA.”

Publishers bid for the rights and the only criticism he has of the process is that it should be restricted to Victorian publishers. He refused to reveal how much his company paid.

Publishers love awards for their publicity factor. Michael Williams of the Wheeler Centre said he wanted the occasion to be like the Logies without the trappiness. It seemed to work. Even authors were coming out of their shells, despite the vast difference between typing in solitude and celebrating on a warm summer evening with a crowd of well-wishers.

“They’re not mutually exclusive,” says author Bri Lee, who won the People’s Choice award for her book Eggshell Skull. “I think the act of writing happens in solitude but the differences between typing in solitude and celebrating on a warm summer evening with a crowd of well-wishers.”

“So we’re in politically difficult times,” says Elise Valmorbida, author of the prize-winning book The Madonna of the Mountains. She grew up in Melbourne but lives in London and works as a communication professional. This is her fifth novel. “We’re in politically difficult times,” she says, and work is “reflecting these difficulties. Personally, I believe that truth is what you get in fiction.”

Rhys Williams will bring his All These Poses tour to Elizabeth Murdoch Hall at the Melbourne Recital Centre (MRC) on Monday, February 25, melding the beautifully moving with the powerful and bombastic, the broad spectrum of Rhys Williams’ talents will be on full display when he performs his most beloved songs from his first two albums.

In a prolific career, the New York-born, Montreal-raised singer-songwriter has released nine studio albums of critically acclaimed chamber-pop, and three albums.

YouTube take over

By Jessica Carrascalao Heard

YouTube stars TwoSet Violin burst in and took over rehearsals at the annual Melbourne Youth Orchestras Summer School, held in January at the Melbourne Conservatorium of Music.

Violinists Eddy Chen and Brent Yang, who have over 800,000 YouTube followers with their comedic take on classical music, spent the fourth day of the summer school visiting ensembles and setting them their signature “Ling Ling” challenges.

The challenges required the duo to randomly choose pieces from each ensemble’s repertoire, and then make them play with extra technical hurdles while being filmed.

Some of those hurdles included performing while using their instruments incorrectly, playing at double speed and even playing while facing away from the conductor. Mr Yang said the takeover was something new, different and fun for the duo.

“It was a good idea to jump in with the kids, actually, to involve them doing things that we normally do on video,” he said.

Dorian Jones, CEO at Melbourne Youth Orchestras, said the takeover was organised because the summer school was about engaging young musicians.

Photography over adversity

By Jessica Carrascalao Heard

“You are stealing people’s souls.”

That’s the accusation a passer-by levelled at photographer and PSC student Susan Brunialti when she first tried her hand at street photography.

The former accountant was approached while crouching low on the concourse at Docklands outside Southern Cross Station, trying to capture reflections in puddles. The encounter left her devastated and she packed up her camera and headed for home.

Susan’s now a skilled street photographer and laughs at the recollection.

“That’s the first time I head out to do street, I get that encounter,” she said.

Although her street photography has won awards and been published in the prestigious Capture Magazine, this genre was not always her first choice.

She had initially bought her DSLR to photograph her son when he was first born. But in 2012, when he was just 15 months old, Susan was diagnosed with breast cancer.

It was this diagnosis that was the catalyst for her to take more serious steps into photography.

At the end of a year of chemotherapy and multiple surgeries, Susan and her family travelled and after seeing her photos from the trip on social media, family and friends encouraged her to take up photography.

“It was just so amazing to have that experience through photography. That it was actually calming me. So yeah, I guess I realised then that photography was the way forward for me,” she said.

Through her diagnoses Susan gravitated to photographing landscapes and seascapes. But through her studies at PSC, she has come to love street photography.

“She’s a big fan of the father of the genre, Henri Cartier-Bresson, and uses his concept of the “decisive moment” in her pictures.

“The decisive moment is important to me because it’s un-staged, it’s not rehearsed,” she said.

It’s important for Susan to tell a story with her images and loves it when viewers discuss and engage with her art.

“That’s what I really love about photography as well. I can take a photo, and someone else can stand back and appreciate it and talk to it,” she said.

Although photography is important to her and she wishes to continue practicing photography into the future, Susan is also enjoying “bringing exhibitions to life”.

She loves the feeling of being immersed in art that an exhibition brings, and wants to share that experience with others.

“Walking into those galleries is just so calming, and is so amazing ... you can really just get lost in photography,” she said.

For those aspiring to try street photography, Susan has some advice.

“Try and mix in with the crowd. And if someone has any issue with you, like one lady did, listen to what they have to say and walk to a different spot,” she said.

Ice cream Xmas!

Santa Claus joined the team at Ray White Southbank on December 14 to celebrate Christmas Australian style with an ice cream cart fundraising afternoon.

In what was a very festive afternoon, the team received great support from the community and visitors to Southbank. With delicious cookies and cream or Ferrero Rocher ice cream on offer, how could one resist!

Teaming up with Southbank Rotary Club, funds raised on the day went to supporting Launch Housing, STEPS Outreach Services and Gippsland Drought Relief. And despite inclement weather arriving late in the day, it didn’t dampen what was a great event.

“Having drought relief as one of our charities was a little ironic as the cart almost got washed away at the end of the day with all the rain! Hopefully that was a good sign of things to come for the farmers,” Ray White’s Georgina Shanahan said.

Riverside Quay complete

The long-awaited redevelopment of Mirvac’s new retail and dining precinct at Riverside Quay is now complete.

The retail precinct is now 100 per cent leased with 10 new eateries peppered throughout the ground plane of Riverside Quay’s four commercial buildings. Together with the existing Southbank Promenade restaurants, the new retailers have already created an enhanced, vibrant food and beverage offering, emulating the ambience and buzz of Melbourne’s famous laneways.

The transformed precinct complements the new public park completed by Mirvac in partnership with the City of Melbourne last year.

Carols wondershow!

A thrilling inaugural Carols concert at Queensbridge Square saw hundreds gather for two nights of Christmas festive fun.

Hosted by developer Beulah International on the Red Stairs Amphitheatre, the celebrations took place on Friday, December 21, with an extension to Saturday, December 22 following heavy rain.

A vibrant family-friendly festive extravaganza, the evening saw world-class local entertainers Planetshakers perform Christmas carols across three 40-minute sets, accompanied by a spectacular light show designed by Paul Collison of Eleven Design.

Residents and visitors packed out Queensbridge Square, embracing the festivities waving glow sticks and joining in the carols.

Beulah International said it was looking forward to sharing in this moment with Carols on Southbank again in 2019.

Why a Magnitsky Act is important for Australia & Human Rights.

The Global Magnitsky Act allows governments to target sanctions at individuals involved in human rights violations, from senior officials down to judges, policemen, even private violators such as CEOs and contractors.

Punitive action includes freezing funds held in banks, seizing assets like luxury villas and preventing corrupt individuals from obtaining visas.

Magnitsky Laws could bring to account those responsible for such atrocities as shooting down Flight MH17, killing 38 Australians onboard - and Russian oligarchs using dirty money to interfere with western elections.

To close the net and to be more effective, Magnitsky Acts have been passed in several other countries. Australia should join this noble cause.

In 2018, Melbourne Ports Labor MP, Michael Danby introduced the International Human Rights & Corruption (Magnitsky Sanctions) Bill into the Australian Parliament, where it is currently being debated.

Welcome to the new year

I would firstly like to welcome all our readers into 2019. Surprisingly there has been a reduced tempo over the Christmas and New Year break – thank goodness!

It is not unusual for the government to make controversial announcements which they are no doubt hoping will be missed by the broader community. Hopefully we haven’t missed any, but maybe it is too soon after the election for the government to have considered anything that might have been controversial.

For the year ahead there are a few things to keep your eyes on. Particularly Crown’s application on One Queensbridge St as its application for that site will expire in March/April. It is expected Crown will apply for an extension, but without a change to the planning scheme I am not too sure that an approval is a formality.

In any case, after the controversy the original application caused, and the dissenting views of the approval from our local MP, Martin Foley, maybe there could be more to it. But I doubt it. Certainly watch this space.

We have seen great progress with stage 1 of the Southbank Boulevard upgrade. This will come to a close around August.

Some minor works on City Rd will commence as part of the City Rd upgrade. We will continue to lobby council to get some meaningful funding and a starting date for that long-awaited project.

There will also be a federal election sometime in the coming months. Your SRA committee will do all it can to try to get the candidates together for another “Meet the Candidates” event so you can ask the hard questions.

We will be holding our annual general meeting in July and, once again, will be reaching out to the community in search of passionate locals who would like to get involved by joining our committee.

More recently though, we have been informed by Heritage Victoria that the development application on the site adjoining the historic Tea House has been rejected on heritage grounds.

You may recall SRA bringing this application to the community’s attention and we encouraged you to have a say. SRA also lobbied hard for this outcome and we are delighted to have learned of the Heritage Victoria decision.

However, as usual with most development applications, a simple objection is not usually the end. I suspect there will be more to come with this. In any case, with the change in the property market, we can only hope that maybe the developer might consider its proposal no longer viable and may give it a miss - for now.

I am looking forward to seeing you around throughout 2019 and receiving more feedback from our members about how our neighbourhood can be improved.

We would certainly welcome your membership, if you are not already a member. You can join up on our website southbankresidents.org.au or through our Facebook page. It is only $10. Without our membership, then we don’t have a voice and we would not be taken seriously by council or the government.

We need all the support we can muster from our community.

The authoritative voice

How many people have authority over you?

How many did you count? Did you use up all your fingers and toes? Or were you stuck on two or three?

We can probably all say that, at the very least, law makers and enforcers have a degree of power over us. We have to accept that if we sign on the dotted line of the social contract. But how many people do you let have authority over you? How many people do you voluntarily allow to impose their will on you, not because you have to, but because you want to?

I imagine that for most of us, the figure we come to is rather limited, and that if there is anyone we submit to, it’s a conditional submission. For instance, if we can’t agree where to go for a holiday, we might surrender to our spouse with the understanding that we’ll get our choice next time.

Surrender is a complicated word. It suggests a loss of autonomy and agency. It is as far from a buzzword of the zeitgeist as strange way, maybe he’s just exhaling the present power-and-autonomy-now air that we’re all breathing.

There is pure oxygen to be found, though. With God we can disentangle ourselves from the anxious impossibility of ubiquitous personal power, to be able to say with comfort and confidence, “the buck stops with Jesus.” I believe it does. I believe that in listening to his voice and accepting its authority we can find peace, and even joy, in life.

Donald Trump was recently asked if the buck stopped with him. His response was typically eyebrow-raising. He said, “The buck stops with everybody!” But, in a strange way, maybe he’s just exhaling the present power-and-autonomy-now air that we’re all breathing.

With God we can disentangle ourselves from the anxious impossibility of ubiquitous personal power, to be able to say with comfort and confidence, “the buck stops with Jesus.” I believe it does. I believe that in listening to his voice and accepting its authority we can find peace, and even joy, in life.

Donald Trump was recently asked if the buck stopped with him. His response was typically eyebrow-raising. He said, “The buck stops with everybody!” But, in a strange way, maybe he’s just exhaling the present power-and-autonomy-now air that we’re all breathing.

There is pure oxygen to be found, though. Constructing Anzac Station

Significant milestones were reached in January with the completion of diaphragm wall (D-wall) construction in the northern part of the station box. D-walls, built up to a depth of 23 metres, are essential in creating underground vertical support structures to stabilise the ground, allowing crews to start excavation.

Transport Infrastructure Project

Metro Tunnel's twin nine-kilometre rail tunnels, which will build the Metro Tunnel, with a model-sized tunnel boring machine (TBM) at Metro Tunnel HQ, the project’s visitor centre in the heart of the CBD.

Four TBMs will be used to build the Metro Tunnel’s twin nine-kilometre rail tunnels.

The TBMs, which have been engineered in Germany and built in China, measure 7.2 metres in diameter, weigh more than 1000 tonnes and are 120 metres in length.

Two TBMs will start tunnelling from the North Melbourne Station site towards the western tunnel entrance in Kensington mid-year, with another two launched from the site of the future Anzac Station on St Kilda Rd towards the eastern tunnel entrance in South Yarra late 2018.

Before they do, the public can view a TBM replica - complete with a spinning cutter-head - at Metro Tunnel HQ, located at 125-133 Swanston St, Melbourne. For more information on Metro Tunnel HQ visit: https://metrotunnel.vic.gov.au.

Owners’ Corporation Law

A downturn in consumer confidence about building standards is the last thing that developers and builders of residential apartment buildings need right now.

However, the saga that is playing out in Sydney’s Opal Tower is serving as a warning shot to all owners and prospective buyers of apartments about the perfect storm that has been brewing in the construction industry for some time.

The bad news is that the deregulated building compliance laws and standards that led to these issues in NSW’s Opal Tower are almost identical to Victoria’s laws and standards in much the same respect, meaning that Melbourne may have an Opal Tower somewhere among it soon enough.

Structural cracks opened up on level 10 of the 392-unit tower in the Sydney suburb of Homebush on Christmas Eve, leading to the enforced evacuation which left residents without a home during the holiday period and is causing more frustrations as some owners face up to another month of living in alternative accommodation before they find out if the tower is safe to return to.

Local sisters Sacha and Stephanie Koltun are on a mission to break down stigma associated with lung-related illness.

It comes after their mother Rhonda, a non-smoker and former athlete, passed away in November last year following a two-and-half year battle with lung cancer. Given Rhonda and husband Tony, who had met playing basketball at a national level, had taught their daughters the importance of exercise and leading healthy lifestyles growing up, accepting their mother’s cancer diagnosis had been difficult to comprehend in itself.

Carrying a persistent cough for some time, Rhonda eventually visited a doctor at the request of her family in April 2016. Even at that point, Sacha said a lung cancer diagnosis had not been on the radar at all.

“To hear it was lung cancer was really confusing and I guess we had to address our own thinking of what we thought was associated with lung cancer. We were just so confused. Mum never smoked so why has she got this diagnosis?” Sacha said.

“It challenges your own beliefs and I think that all of the anti-smoking campaigns have done a really good job in awareness but then I guess it’s the treatment and access to research and this feeling that people have brought it on themselves.”

Upon hearing the news, Sacha and Stephanie said people would often immediately say things like “I didn’t know your mum smoked,” when, in fact, she had never smoked in her life. It quickly became a growing point of frustration for the family.

According to the Lung Foundation, lung cancer is the leading cause of cancer death in the country (responsible for 18.9 per cent of all cancer deaths) and the fifth most commonly diagnosed.

It is also has the lowest five-year survival rate of the five most commonly diagnosed cancers at 17 per cent. Access to treatments, including with regard to cost, is one of the main challenges. In 2019, 9198 Australians will die from the disease.

With Sacha residing at Quay West and Steph at Riverside Quay, living in the same neighbourhood has proven to be valuable for the sisters during what has been, and continues to be, a difficult period.

“While her mother remained positive and resolute right until the end, Steph said the family had been able to see first-hand just how a significant lack of investment into research was impacting lung cancer’s poor survival rates.

“They thought mum would react to it actually didn’t react to so there would be a small sign of success but then after a while the growth would continue and accelerate,” Stephanie said.

“I think mum was a little bit rare in that case. But she would say ‘I am rare, I am special!’ She was always positive no matter whatever news she received.”

“While the experience has taken its toll on the family, they are looking to use the tragedy as an opportunity to change the conversation about lung cancer not just in Australia but also around the world.

“According to the Lung Foundation, lung cancer can affect anyone, not just smokers. One in four women and one in ten men diagnosed with cancer have no history of smoking. Yet one in two Australians believe those that have lung cancer are a smoker.

“Research shows that if you drink alcohol than you’re more likely to develop a cancer but there’s no discriminating against people because they enjoy a glass of wine so there’s a lot of work to do,” Sacha said.

“I guess it’s the same with all of the mental health awareness that was happening 20 years ago and we’re just starting to crack those types of discussions now.”

Both Sacha and Stephanie said they hoped to take on more advocacy work on the issue in the same spirit as their mother, who herself, was renowned for advocating for a lot of change in the community.

“The message from the [Lung] Foundation is that anyone with lungs can get lung cancer and I think that message really needs to be pushed,” Steph said. “No one is in a position that they’re more likely to get it than someone else, whether you smoke or not.”

Montague Community Alliance

Happy new year, folks. As 2019 dawns and the business of life takes over, I would like to reflect on the changes to our neighbourhood and imagine what may be on the way.

Montague has certainly changed dramatically since February 2018; we now have a Fishermans Bend Plan, with the precinct plans to be finalised soon. We have a new park ( Kirrip Park), a new school (South Melbourne Primary) and many, many, many new businesses and residents.

There seems to be a lot of new religious organisations springing up all over Montague, we are not sure if it’s a Melbourne-wide phenomena but very interesting to see that happen here. Of course, as one would expect in an urban renewal area, we have architects, town planners and building companies moving in, with long-term plans to build and sell commercial or residential businesses and homes. We are all looking forward to new growth on Montague ...

To this end ... I recently heard a very interesting program on Radio National about how a dysfunctional neighbourhood or challenges in a close-living community can have a negative effect on someone’s mental health.

The speaker commented that it appeared that government and council planners and commercial developers may not be considering those aspects of the community’s mental health and wellbeing when making their decisions about urban planning. This got me thinking, so I asked a few people what they thought.

The overwhelming response was people do not feel in control of their environment. This data was mainly from those who have been living and working in Montague and surrounds before the Capital City Zoning in 2012.

The second response concerned a lack of community spirit. I did ask a few newbies (past two or three years) and they weren’t even interested in the question. This led me to wonder, how long does one need to live or work in a community to feel part of it? And with feeling part of the community, share a common interest in developing livability and amenity with one’s neighbours?

Most of the residents, old and new and including those living in the new Nightfall and Gravity Apartment blocks do feel somewhat connected to each other. They have a shared understanding that we need to be mindful of each other, respectful and courteous in our interactions. The biggest challenges seem to come from the new businesses who appear not to realise that this is a mixed-use area with many residents who have the same rights as they do in their homes, to enjoy peace and quiet in evenings, early mornings and weekends.

A couple of examples:

There are several new businesses adjacent to homes, where cleaning and servicing happens outside of business hours, e.g. early (before 9am) on weekend mornings, or during the day on weekends – including public holidays. These activities are difficult for residents as they are often loud, disturbing their quiet enjoyment of their homes. Residents have reported that when approaching these businesses they were met with aggression and that the business owners are not amenable to negotiation.

And there are difficult residents - that is obvious, but it is usually because the change that is occurring here in Montague has been “done” to them rather than negotiated with them.

So, having said all that, let’s try and find a way to all work together, to ensure the residents old and new, the families moving in and the elderly who’ve been here a long time have peace and quiet during non business hours. AND the residents must allow all the businesses to work without hindrance during business hours.

It is incumbent on us (those already living and working here) to welcome new neighbours, but it is also incumbent on those joining our village to be aware that this is a 24/7 residential environment. Could we not have a little more kindness, thoughtfulness and above all neighbourly intelligence? We all need to take care of our mental health!

The Montague Community Alliance would love to hear from you, with ideas for this column or for public forums. We will keep an eye on those seeking to be elected in the upcoming federal election and their views on Montague and the greater Fishermans Bend.

We await the Montague Precinct plans with some anticipation and look forward to further communications throughout the year. And of course, there are many more Montagnians to meet.

P.S. But, of course as a leveller, there’s always the Montague Street Bridge!
Subscription wine!

Award winning local retail wine store Act of Wine, has just launched a monthly wine subscription service.

The service will showcase organic, biodynamic and natural wines, both local and imported. The wines are carefully selected by a panel of wine industry professionals who assess each product and determine its suitability for inclusion, rather than relying on the subjective opinion of one person.

Customers can choose either 3, 6 or 12 bottles to be delivered monthly with the option to receive all white wines, all red wines or a mix of both. There will be some bubbles in there too. Packs can be purchased as a one-off or a recurring monthly subscription. There’s no lock-in contract and customers are free to cancel at any time.

For as little as $75 (exc. shipping) a month, customers can enjoy handmade, sustainable wines, delivered to their door. Customers who sign up for a recurring six ($150) or 12 ($300) bottle subscription will receive a pair of Act of Wine branded Gabriel Glas wine glasses in their second month.

“The aim is to take the hassle out of purchasing wine for people who still want to enjoy well-crafted wines derived from sustainable agriculture,” Act of Wine manager Sam Fitzsimmons said.

“We want people to be able to enjoy a plethora of wonderful wines without having to go into a wine store to do so. Of course, we still encourage people to come and visit our store but now we can showcase our products to a broader range of people and give these exceptional winemakers the visibility they deserve.”

The packs will be shipped out on the fifth day of every month and to be eligible for the month’s pack, customers must be signed up by the 31st of the previous month.

To start your wine journey, head to actofwine.com.au and follow the links.

Act of Wine is located at 22 Fanning St, Southbank.

Night Market returns

The beloved South Melbourne Night Market returned on January 10 and will run right through until February 28.

Now in its 11th year, the 2019 South Melbourne Night Market will be bigger and better than ever, with more road closures around the market to allow for an increasing number of visitors, including more seating and even more food options.

Open every Thursday night until February 28, this year’s market will feature 18 food trucks, four food marquees and six food carts, with many of the market’s regular food traders also open.

As well as dozens of foods options, visitors will be entertained by two bands each night, hosted across two stages, featuring an exciting line-up of local and international musicians bringing indie, RnB, folk, pop, rock and Latin to the much-loved twilight market.

And if sampling the street food and enjoying live music isn’t enough, there is plenty of shopping to be done too. Many of the market’s popular stallholders will be selling their unique fashion, homewares and artisan goods under the stars, alongside pop-up stallholders, featuring some of Melbourne’s most exciting, emerging designers and artisans.

Port Phillip Mayor Dick Gross said the increased size of this year’s night market reflected the growing popularity of the summer twilight event.

“From humble beginnings just over a decade ago, the South Melbourne Night Market has grown into a must-do Melbourne event, with locals and visitors from interstate and overseas coming to the market at twilight to stroll the historic streets and market lanesways, enjoying world-class food, music and shopping,” he said.

“To cater for the growing popularity of the event, this year we’ve closed off more streets to ensure there is plenty of room for all traders and entertainment and plenty of seating for visitors. We believe the 2019 South Melbourne Night Market will be the best yet.”

One of the newest features of this year’s market night market will be the new Aptus Oyster Bar and Seafood Grill, which will operate a Soul & Seafood session each Thursday night, serving freshly shucked oysters alongside a huge range of delicious, fresh seafood.

Cecil St restaurants will also be open for business, where you’ll find award-winning paella at Simply Spanish, traditional gozleme at Koy and delicious dumplings from Bambu and much more.

The talented line-up of local bands and musicians playing in February include:

February 7: Brian El Dorado and the Tuesday People (funk, soul, swingy blues).

February 14: Special love-themed entertainment for Valentines Day – stay tuned.

February 21: Red See Blue (Middle Eastern Jazz)

The market runs every Thursday until February 28 from 5:30pm to 9:30pm. Southmelbournenightmarket.com.au
I think it’s an iconic day for Australia, for when it was colonised. And a lot of people are putting a tarnish on it by trying to change it. And those people that protested against it, I really wonder what they are protesting against because they probably haven’t seen what goes on in the Northern Territory with the Aboriginal people, so it’s probably more of a rent-a-crowd, I reckon, that they don’t know what they really are protesting. But that’s my opinion. Australia Day’s a day that we should be celebrating, and I don’t think it should be changed.

I just think we need to leave things alone and move on with it. It should represent all Australians, whether you’re black, white, brindle or what you are. And, well, we’ve set that date, you know. I think people should just move on and say, “Oh well.” They really want to change the date, well, I don’t know. I don’t think it’s that important, really, what date it is.

I disagree with that date. I’m pretty sure it should be changed. Definitely. Because we’re celebrating an invasion day, not the date that Australia became Australia.

What do you think of January 26 as Australia Day?

I think it’s just a public holiday. It’s Australians’ day. Every country they have their own independent day or public holiday to celebrate something and I think they have should have this one, Australia Day.

I think we probably could change it out of respect to the indigenous, our Australian indigenous people. It is very controversial. I don’t know when we would change it to, but it does need to be inclusive, I think, of everyone.

I have read snippets on Facebook about there being some kind of drama, but I actually have no idea. I actually have got no idea what the fuss is about. So, I haven’t looked into it at all. Australia Day’s the 26th. I don’t know why that would be a problem, but I haven’t really done any research or anything, so I’m not really sure.

Why Magnitsky Act is important for Australia

Most Australians were unfamiliar with Ukraine prior to the missile shooting down Malaysian Airlines MH17. 38 Australians were among the 298 passengers murdered when a Russian mobile rocket launcher destroyed this civilian airliner flying over Eastern Ukraine.

The Joint Investigative Team, in which Australia participated, reported in May that the Buk-7 from the 53rd Brigade of the Russian army crossed into disputed Ukraine from the Russian Federation. Both then and now, Russia and its leader Vladimir Putin have displayed a cruel indifference to the Russian Federation’s role in causing these tragic and unnecessary deaths of citizens from around the world, including the 38 Australians.

The United States, the United Kingdom and Canada have responded to Russia’s increasing international aggression with a democratic, legislative response called the Magnitsky legislation. These laws link Russian and other authoritarian countries’ corruption and human rights abuses with their leaders having their assets frozen and receiving family income. Partially as a response to Russia’s inhumanity to the murder of our Australians by their army, I am moving an Australian version of the Global Magnitsky Act as a Private Member’s Bill this month in the House of Representatives.

Magnitsky Acts are becoming a new weapon in the West to sanction government officials and others connected with government officials working together with serious human rights abuses and corruption in their own countries.

International lawyer Geoffrey Robertson argues: “Magnitsky laws are national laws that allow a government to apply targeted sanctions on any individual involved in human rights violations, from senior officials to low level officers, from judges, to policemen and even non-government actors such as CEOs and contractors. They take the form of asset freezes for funds held in banks and other financial institutions, as well as bans on visas for entering the country.” (Australian Quarterly Oct-Dec 2018).

The first "Magnitsky Act" was passed in the US during the Obama presidency in 2012. It was specifically aimed at Russians who engaged in serious human rights violations and corruption. It provided for the US President to designate perpetrators who would be placed on the “Magnitsky List” and then be subject to sanctions, such as them travelling to the US.

Magnitsky Acts owe their genesis to two courageous men – Sergei Magnitsky and Bill Browder. Sergei Magnitsky was a Russian lawyer who acted for Bill Browder’s Hermitage Capital Management fund in Russia. Magnitsky discovered that some $230 million paid by Browder’s company in taxes to the Russian government had been fraudulently misappropriated by Russian government officials working together with organised crime.

Instead of the Russian government going after the corrupt officials, the government pursued Magnitsky and Browder. Browder escaped but Magnitsky was arrested, jailed and died in prison pending trial.

The idea of pushing back on authoritarian regimes like Russia was synthesised by Browder. “Criminal justice is based on jurisdiction: One cannot prosecute someone in New York for a murder committed in Moscow. As I thought about it, the murder of Sergei Magnitsky was done to cover up the theft of $230 million from the Russian Treasury. I knew the people that stole that money wouldn’t keep it in Russia. As easily as they stole the money, it could be stolen from them. These people keep their ill-gotten gains in the West, where property rights and the rule of law exist. This led to the idea of freezing their assets and banning their visa here in the West.”

Other countries, such as the United Kingdom, Canada, Estonia, Iceland and Lithuania have passed their versions of Global Magnitsky Acts. Australia should adopt its own "Global Magnitsky Act" so that Australia cannot be considered a safe haven for corrupt human rights violators from overseas. I have drafted a Private Member’s Bill which will be submitted to Parliament this month. It allows for regulations to be passed that would impose sanctions on such violators preventing them from travelling to, trading with, or holding assets in, Australia.

In addition to making these violators international pariahs and preventing them from enjoying their ill-gotten gains and status in the West, the threat of Magnitsky sanctions can be a significant deterrent to those who may be contemplating conduct that is corrupt or in violation of international human rights norms. The Chinese Uyghur human rights activist, Rebiya Kadeer, made this point very clear in her statement in the U.S. House of Representatives subcommittee on April 29, 2015 where she said: “If this [Global Magnitsky Act] becomes law, it will have a profound ripple effect, because mere listing of some of the most well-known human rights violators in authoritarian states like China will send a powerful message to low ranking officials that their criminal actions will not be immune to international scrutiny, condemnation and consequences.”

So, for instance, a future Australian Magnitsky Act could bar Xinjiang Communist Party viceroy Chen Quanguo with his monstrous plan to incarcerate one million Uyghurs in concentration camps.

Enacting a Global Magnitsky Act will protect fundamental human rights of the oppressed and save the lives of people, including in Burma, Darfur, North Korea or Syria.

It is now time that Australia joined this growing international movement and adopted its own Global Magnitsky law. The more countries that adopt such laws, the more jurisdictions that can potentially be made out of bounds to individuals involved in shooting down planes over the Ukraine.

February: Sustainability Month

2019 started wonderfully by welcoming children and parents back with their home-grown sunflowers from last year’s contest, to see who grew the tallest one.

It was lovely to hear all about their experiences of what was the first time growing a plant for many. Once the winner emerged with a 47cm tall plant, the children could add their plants to Southbank’s community garden. Some of these sunflowers are now proudly hosted in the green planters near the kids’ playground, with each young grower’s name next to it.

Apart from bonding with the youngest community members through gardening, the holidays gave us the perfect opportunity to bond with our own members through sustainable holiday activities. On December 8, we had a fun wreath-making day, where we built our own zero waste Christmas wreaths using native plants and other natural materials from the garden.

It was a day that wouldn’t have been possible without the generous help of MICM (Melbourne Inner City Management). MICM’s growing support of our group’s efforts and work in the community was also shown through its donation of a watering trolley we desperately needed so we can cover the watering needs of the whole garden. A big thank you to Dorothy and the MICM team.

With Boyd Park construction work now being carried out, our garden is entering a hiatus. While we’re waiting for this work and our new garden site, it’s the perfect time to visit other community gardens in the area.

Well-established gardens like in Docklands and Port Melbourne are perfect grounds to learn how other community groups work on building strong gardens and sharing practical long-term gardening knowledge to our group.

It will also give us gardens to interact with while we’re waiting for ours, and the opportunity to meet more like-minded people in neighbouring communities.

The first garden tour will likely be on Saturday, March 2 to the Docklands garden.

We’re also continuing sustainability education this month, by organising a recycling learning day later in February, where Council will help residents learn more about recycling in Southbank, restrictions, recycling myths, and future plans. For details or to join the community gardens tours or recycling learning day, keep checking our Facebook page facebook.com/ SouthbankSustainabilityGroup, or email us: southbanksustainability@gmail.com

Lastly, with the National Sustainable Living Festival happening this month, we encourage everyone to go to as many sustainability activities as possible happening all around the city and Boyd. More details at: www.all.org.au

Gangs in Southbank

Recent "gang" activity in inner Melbourne has received lots of attention – but it is nothing new.

Southbank (when part of South Melbourne) had its share, which is not surprising given it was a relatively poor suburb.

South became notorious for its larrikin gangs (or pushes), particularly the "Flying Angels" who terrorised the district around 1900. A few years later, they were joined by the "White Rose" push, and the "Montague" push.

The young men, who were unemployed or worked as unskilled labourers, gathered in streets such as Moray, indulging in petty thieving and being general nuisances, as well as abusing and assaulting residents, throwing rocks from building sites at houses and stealing from shops, hotels and businesses.

They displayed their contempt for authority by attacking local police, and any publican who ejected them for rowdy behaviour risked having his premises demolished and his stock stolen.

They often organised fights with gangs from other suburbs, such as Fitzroy, Carlton and Collingwood, sometimes fought out at football matches at the Lake Oval, home of South Melbourne club (which had the nickname of the "blood-stained angels") for their white jumpers with red sash.

Described by the local press as "hard-fisted, foul-mouthed, desperate scoundrels", their activities meant that locals were fearful of venturing onto the streets after nightfall and led to the call for more police in South and for the courts and magistrates to be far more severe. Sound familiar?

There was a resurgence of gang activity in the 1920s but now many of them were armed, as many weapons were freely available after WWI. In those difficult economic times, the gangs were perhaps more involved in robberies from houses and businesses (Sturt St factories were favourite targets) than terrorising citizens.

Gang activity continued into the 40s and 50s. Dockland suburbs were hotbeds of crime, with seamen from other countries being primary targets for robbery and assault by local gangs, often armed with razors.

A new breed of local gangs emerged in South in the 60s - sharpees. South had the Montague boys and South Melbourne boys. Nearby suburbs such as Middle Park and Port Melbourne also had their gangs, who all knew each other. Within a family some brothers were in different gangs and some members played football in teams with members from other gangs. Whilst all the local gangs got on pretty well with one another, outsiders from other areas in Melbourne were not welcome and the locals would join together in fights against them.

Residents of Southbank should be grateful that the old days of gang violence have disappeared from our streets.

Pet's Corner

When the dog chooses the owner

By Jessica Carrascalao Heard

When Lyric the Siberian Husky first saw his owners with his piercing blue eyes, it was love at first sight.

“He came to us, basically, so he chose us. We didn’t choose him,” said his owner, commercial manager Steve O’Brien.

It has been ten years since Steve and Lyric first met. Steve and his wife had just been on holiday, and after finding Lyric online, they visited the breeder.

Lyric was the second last dog available for purchase, but before Steve and his wife could choose between them, Lyric ran up.

“And he’s been doing that for ten years ever since,” Steve said.

Although Steve and his wife threw around other names for the black-and-white husky, Steve said Lyric was the name that stuck.

They came up with the name independently of each other. Steve had heard of another dog called Lyric.

The name “Lyric” had also been in the news at the time, as Lyric was the name of one of the victims of the Black Saturday fires.

“So independently we just kind of chose the name, which is really weird,” Steve said.

At 20kg, Lyric is on the small side for a male of his breed.

Steve said that Lyric could sometimes be cat-like in nature; a trait which Steve considered to be a plus.

But being a husky, Lyric’s prey-orientated instincts can take over, and he likes to chase other animals.

“He’s never touched a shoe, never touched anything that’s not his, so he’s been awesome…like, we can leave stuff around,” Steve said.

During the day, Lyric’s a house dog, Steve said he had managed to train Lyric to leave things alone.

“He’s never touched a shoe, never touched anything that’s not his, so he’s been awesome…like, we can leave stuff around,” Steve said.

Lyric is social, but fiercely independent and strong-willed, loves his walks and playing with other dogs.

Steve laughs when asked if he considers Lyric as another member of the family.

“He’s the head of the family… he’s really number three, but definitely. He goes everywhere we do, but yes. Absolutely,” he said.
Cladding confusion continues

We Live Here has been inundated with complaints that it has been almost impossible to get accurate, consistent information about cladding and how to address the issue.

Owners’ corporations (OCs) have been telling us they are getting mixed messages about whether there is a cladding issue at all. Is our building on a danger list or not? Some buildings just could not find out what was going on. And other buildings not “on the list” were misled into inaction.

The whole issue has been managed by the authorities in an ad hoc, shambling fashion. Owners have suffered from incompetence at all levels of government. Issues include:

- Lack of communication to residents and owners;
- Poor communication between the government and councils;
- No guidelines; and
- Rapidly shifting approaches by municipal building surveys.

How many of you received a building notice as a Christmas present from your local council grinch?

Yes, that’s what happened. Late last year, the Victorian Building Authority (VBA) and the Municipal Association of Victoria pressured councils to act before Christmas against high-rise buildings with “inappropriate use” of cladding.

The councils responded with a Santa-sack of building notices.

Waiting, waiting …

Let’s go back to this time one year ago when the CEO of the VBA said: “I understand you might be worried about this issue and I assure you that we are working with owners’ corporations, fire authorities, local councils and other government bodies to help you and to address this issue as quickly as possible.”

If you were lucky, you would have received a postcard from the VBA with this statement in February 2018. Some of us got nothing - until the building notice. Since then, hapless high-rise owners have been needing information and direction on what to do.

We Live Here does have some good news. The VBA has now updated its website with more detailed information. Google “VBA assessing and fixing cladding” You will find a step by step process outlined.

What is not on the website is the expected timeframe. Our members are telling us that, start-to-finish, the process is measured in years, not months.

The VBA website says every building over three storeys will be assessed for unsafe cladding, and is offering free tests to determine if your cladding is combustible. This could save your owners’ corporation thousands of dollars, but is of no help to those who’ve muddled out for themselves how to go about it.

Who’s next on the cladding hit-list?

The VBA will prioritise buildings for inspection based on several factors, including “intelligence from local councils,” if you can forgive the oxymoron.

Put a fire risk plan in place NOW

We Live Here encourages all high-rise apartment buildings to implement a fire risk management plan NOW. This will help you avoid getting emergency orders. The plan should set out all the management steps you have implemented to make your building safe while the assessment is being carried out. Properly managed, you can get through the whole cladding resolution process with only a building notice, not a building order.

Parliament shapes up

We were pleased to see the Transport Matters Party elected to parliament. We are looking forward to seeing the approach it takes because of the number of parallels between ride-sharing and short-stays.

Living under the AirnbnB Bill

High-rise residents will soon be subjected to the limitations of the so-called AirnbnB Bill, set to become law on February 1, 2019. Short-stay guests trash your building? $10,000 damage? $20,000 damage? Bad luck, the maximum you’ll get is $2000. And under the AirnbnB Act you cannot seek redress from the owner of the apartment – you’ll have to chase the overseas visitor who probably just skipped the country.

AirnbnB crime and damage has been on a sharp uptick - have a look at our website for links to the latest media stories on the wild times in apartments and our suburbs.

We Live Here encourages all high-rise residents down at Apollo Bay. How about a postcard from the VBA with this statement – until the building notice. Since then, hapless high-rise owners have been needing information and direction on what to do.

No guidelines; and

Poor communication between the all levels of government. Issues include:

We Live Here again calls on Daniel Andrews’ government to:

- Amend the Owners Corporation Act 2006 to regulate the short-stay industry;
- Restore powers to OCs to make decisions about use of a building; and
- Listen to residents. You did listen to residents down at Apollo Bay. How about a postcard from the VBA with this statement – until the building notice. Since then, hapless high-rise owners have been needing information and direction on what to do.

How to make a habit stick

Making something a habit and making it stick, requires:

- Identify your goal. This will help you decide on the specific actions that will move you in the right direction. Start with small goals and actions;
- Create environmental triggers. Start by connecting the actions of your habits to activities you already do regularly (e.g. take two extra tram stops to the gym).

How to make a habit stick

Making something a habit and making it stick, requires:

- Identify your goal. This will help you decide on the specific actions that will move you in the right direction. Start with small goals and actions;
- Create environmental triggers. Start by connecting the actions of your habits to activities you already do regularly (e.g. take two extra tram stops to the gym, when you go to the cafe to buy your lunch, walk a few more steps to the park to eat it outside); and
- Use small, regular, related rewards. Don’t motivate yourself with rewards. Use them to help you enjoy your habits (e.g. the smell of freshly-ground coffee as you smell of freshly-ground coffee as you watch a picturesque sun rise for your new 5.30am wake up routine). Rewards are a huge part of how to make something a habit. Firstly, if you are going to develop any new routine, you need to actually like it. You will never last long doing things you hate. So, once you have the cue and taken action, the rewards must:

- Occur immediately after the action;
- Be actually related to the action; and
- Be small. Your reward needs to be something you can’t get without doing the action, e.g. the reward of getting fresh air and vitamin D from going for a walk in your lunch break (instead of eating at your desk).

And don’t forget, willpower is the most important element of habit formation. Willpower is absolutely “learnable”, so persist and do not give up at the first hurdle. Habit formation will get more automatic and therefore easier with time!
